"The South 40" by JAMES A. SMITH EXTENSION AGENT

In recent days I've had a number of calls concerning lead spots in lawns. When the owners removed some turf they found a heavy infestation of grubs.

This is an excellent time of year to treat turf areas for grubs. They are near the soil surface, they are small and easy to kill.

For details ask for control series 125.

Just over 1,000 yearling cattle are to sell today (Thursday) at the fall yearling sale in Lynchburg.

Next Wednesday, September 19, there will be a tour of the soybean variety trials. The tour will meet at Evergreen Baptist Church at 1:30 and proceed to two locations on the Keith Harris farm. There are four varieties that will interest soybean producers; York, Dare, and the new high yielding Essex. These varieties are conventional planted. At another location we will see FFR666 stubble planted.

Morris Alexander, Extension Soybean Specialist and a member of the Virginia Tech Entomology Department will be with us.

We're still getting calls about bagworm control. These insects feed or arbovitae, white cedar, juniper, honey locust, chinese elm, sycamore, and maple.

They are difficult to kill this late in the year. We recommend that carbaryl (Sevin) be applied in June at the rate of 2 tablespoons per gallon of water.

If Sevin doesn't kill now, best bet is to pick them off and burn.

Eggs are deposited in the old bag for next year's hatching.

John Wilson tells me that he plans to chemically treat his high moisture corn.

There's an applicator that can be rented for $20 a day and has the capacity of treating 1,000 bushels per hour.

These acids will react on metal and concrete. There are several options you have for protecting the metal: line bin with polyethelyene, spray or paint with linseed oil, apply Interchlor, a paint like material manufactured by International Paint Company, apply an asphalt type paint (similar to that used on mobile home roofs) or apply on epoxy type paint.

Several people have asked about storing dried beans or peas for winter use. Usually the quantity is quite small so heat is the easiest method of preservation.

Seed should be spread in a shallow pan not more than 2 inches deep, set over thermostat at 180°F for 15 minutes and leave in the oven with door closed for another ½ hour.

Hints For Kitchen Safety

Here are several safety hints which you should note and observe in the kitchen: Keep a fire extinguisher handy. And also keep table salt or baking soda handy to put out a grease fire. Never carry a grease fire--the flames blow towards you. Smother the fire with a lid; Keep all flammable materials away from cooking food. Pot holders, grease, paper towels, plastic, curtains, long hair and loose clothing will ignite quickly; Keep cords out of the way to avoid snagging, tripping or jerking; Wipe up spilled liquids, food and grease to prevent falls; Dispose of cracked, chipped or damaged dishes and glassware; Use sharp knives with caution. Slice away from yourself and chop on a cutting board. And be sure to store knives in a safe place--away from small hands which like to cut up things; Know which fuses or circuit breakers apply to the kitchen, so you can turn off power in an emergency; Never mix two or more cleaning products unless the manufacturer recommends doing so in print.

You should by all means learn basic first aid for burns, shock and poisoning. Also keep emergency phone numbers handy. Your instant action when a kitchen accident occur prevent a catastrophe.
